"Ernulf De Hesding

From Hesdin, Pas-de-Calais, arr. Montreuil, cant. Hesdin (Loyd, 51), Domesday tenant-in-chief. Apparently a brother or brother-in-law of Wacelin, provost of Beaurain, arr. Montreuil, cant. Campagne-les-Hesdin, under Walter Tirel of Poix (q.v.) (Fossier, Picardie, p. 240, and idem Cart, de Hesdin). By his wife Emmelina he had issue two sons William and Amald, and two daughters and eventual coheiresses Matilda, wife first of a William and then of Patrick de Caorces, and Avelina, wife first of Alan fitz Flaad and then of Robert fiz Walter. Possibly father also of Reiner de Hesdin, father of William, who assisted William sheriff of Kent in an inquest of 1127 (Stenton, English Justice, Appendix, no. i, pp. 116-22). One of his kinswomen became a nun of Shaftesbury. His monastic benefactors were extensive and eclectic, and included his local house of Saint-Georges-de-Hesdin, of which the charters frequently refer to his nephew Robert Frete! and his descendants. One of the charters (Cart. Hesdin, no. 52) was a grant by Amald of land at Norton in England which refers to his chaplain Theodard and was attested by his dapifer Arnulf. He was accused of complicity in the conspiracy led by Robert de Mowbray in 1093, but cleared himself in a judicial duel. He soon afterwards left England on the First Crusade, where he died at Antioch."

"A fourth case where a daughter was given favourable treatment was Maud, daughter of Ernulf de Hesdin, who married Patrick dc Chaworth. Ernulf is known to have had two sons, William and Ernulf II, and two daughters, Aveline, who married Alan FitzFlaad, and one who entered Shaftesbury Abbey.<sup>70</sup> A sizeable portion of Ernulf *s lands passed to Patrick, and the rest to Ernulf II. The latter was banged in 1138 and his lands then passed to William FitzAlan. Again a possible explanation for the division of Ernulf I's lands was two marriages, though Barlow has suggested that Ernulf may have been punished for complicity in the revolt against Rufus of 1095."
